Asking open-ended questions is a wonderful way to promote thinking, creativity and adult-child interactions. Open-ended questions truly “open the door” for meaningful back-and-forth conversations. They also stretch children to think beyond simple one word answers. This is exactly what commonly-used environmental rating scales are looking at during evaluations! During this webinar, you will not just learn about what open-ended questions are and why they are important, you will have the opportunity to practice formulating open-ended questions based on experiences. There will also be plenty of time for Q&A. We promise you will walk about with skills you can put into play the next day! Please plan to join us!
